Medieval literature has always been lively and inventive, and recent translations and scholarship demonstrate that even now, medieval texts explore quite modern interests in fantasy, gender roles, consent, animal studies, and post-colonialism. kingdoms, and superhuman knights. Such figures and elements could represent social or cultural threats, people who departed from cultural norms, ethnic or racial “others,” or idealized representations humanity. Course goals are to analyze medieval literature; develop a sense of how marvelous events, settings, and characters allow medieval writers (and us) to confront issues of the utmost cultural importance; and practice skills in drafting essays that develop and support arguments about literary texts. Readings will include recent translations of ‘Beowulf’ (2020) and ‘Sir Gawain and the Green Knight’ (2008); medieval fairy, werewolf, and shapeshifter stories; tales of knighthood adventures, including ones that take place in the Middle East; and other short selections.
